

hostility in the electorate. "I've walked the state, I've knocked on doors, I've gone all around and generally I'm kind of one of them, the people, rather than one of the other group. But in this campaign I wasn't one of them, I was one of the other group." There is such a feeling of anger and frustration, Child says, and he couldn't identify exactly where it was coming from. But I did realize it was deep and strong and that three-fourths of the things people were so mad about were things we've already addressed, but you couldn't get them to listen. After he read Philip Powers' The Death of Common Sense he says it was like a big light went on. Now I know more than anything else what we've done to ourselves. "We govern with the consent of the governed and we are about to lose it," Childs said. "Without that consent we cannot accomplish anything." Thank you.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Thank you, Senator. Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Madam President, members of the Legislature, Senator Witek may feel that everybody knows that the name or nickname "Kate" is short for Kathleen. But couldn't it be Kathryn, couldn't it be Katrina and Kaitlin which I had stated? So it could mean, it could be any of a number of names, but I'd like to ask Senator Witek a number of questions and these will go to her amendment.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Senator Witek.

SENATOR WITEK: Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Witek, "dear" will be quite all right. That's what you said when you came over here and there was nobody but you and me.

SENATOR WITEK: (Laughs) He's not telling you the truth.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Now on page...

SENATOR WITEK: Just trying to make me embarrassed, that's all.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: On page 8, well you know how I am.

SENATOR WITEK: I know.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. On page 8...
