understand the eye and its function, to some extent, if you've read about it, if you see it in her face, where it belongs. But if you put an eye on a plate and showed it to him, all of a sudden, this is not something that's that beautiful, that he wants to just sit there and contemplate, and it makes him feel like going off into poetic, I'll say license. When you take these little bitty pieces that the Legislature tends to do, that lobbyists will try to get the Legislature to do, that small town, tin pot politicians, like the mayor of Omaha will try to get the Legislature to do, they want us to be as simple-minded and foolish as they are. They want us to abandon our responsibility to try to see the totality of the picture, and not say that this is a magical cure, this is the elixir, this is what those con men used to sell when they went throughout the west and tell you, you take a shot of this and you'll be young again. And you look at him, and he looks older than Senator Tyson and me put together. That's getting up there, Senator Tyson. And that poor, old, crotchety fellow is shaking like a leaf on a tree as he tries to hold up what he wants you to buy, and you can't even read it, he's shaking so much. It doesn't work for him, but he'll get you to buy it because you are so desperate to be young again, you will accept anything on the chance that it might work. There are people so obsessed with this talk of property tax relief that anything, anything...

PRESIDENT ROBAK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...that somebody says will bring it is going to be accepted. And they'll say, well, why don't we try it. That is not good enough for me, brothers and sisters. There was a man named Malcolm X, and he said that if you want somebody to drink from a container, you do not put a picture on that container of skull and crossbones, that's not how you get somebody to drink from it. When you bring a proposition like this, there are questions that the introducer cannot answer. There are processes and procedures that are not provided, and those who support it want to say, well, we can take care of that later, that is not the way we should deal with the constitution, and this ought not to be adopted.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Wickersham.
