your edification and delight, lists of cities that follow this comparison of more than...not more than double or less than half. So there are plenty of things to compare cities with if you're talking about the city of Omaha and the city of Lincoln. The third of this very simple amendment, with respect to a judgment or order that applies to any class of municipality, the judgment or order is not based on a comparison with an employer in a municipality whose metropolitan area population is more than double or less than half of the metropolitan areas or the municipality which is the subject of comparison. Here we are talking about Omaha and Lincoln. Previously, I've got ahead of myself, which I do about three times a day. We were talking about cities of the first and second class and villages. There, in a nutshell is the amendment. Now let me give you a little background on the amendment. For about the last eight years, there has been a bill offered in this Legislature, and for the last years that it has been offered, it never got to the floor. In an attempt to bring some portions of that matter to the floor, when my bill, which is my priority bill, LB 1075, was killed in committee, which I, quite frankly, fully expected it to be, I reached around, looked around, for a compromise. But what happened was the attorney returned, the thing was explained to him, and he said, absolutely not. And I have to confess, Mr. Speaker, that I was a bit bemused. I was a bit bewildered about why he would not, and suddenly it came to me. Someone had come up with a compromise that could throw cold water, quite a bit of it, on the fire box of the locomotive that was pulling his gravy train. The man's making over $400 an hour for doing this. Why would he admit to it? He wouldn't. Why would he be for a compromise? He wouldn't be. Why would he want his gravy train to enter the station, come to a halt? He wouldn't. But be that as it may, there was a compromise offered. The compromise went nowhere, even though it was only...it wasn't even a faint shadow of (LB) 1075. But that's neither here nor there. Here we are
