SENATOR CHAMBERS: You said a dust collector?

SENATOR TYSON: Dust collector, yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: See, for a layperson, I'd be thinking of either a vacuum cleaner or a dustpan, so it is more technical than most of us would think, but...

SENATOR TYSON: This is...this is how you buy a $25 million vacuum cleaner, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. Well, could I ask you a few questions that might help me...

SENATOR TYSON: Sure.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ..zero in on what I want to know?

SENATOR TYSON: Yeah.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: There is an item which I'll accept your description of it as being unique. Would the one seeking the item be aware of which companies may be able to do it and interested in doing it, and they will be contacted not to make a formal bid but for discussions or whatever?

SENATOR TYSON: That would be correct, yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And...

SENATOR TYSON: And you'd probably survey the entire field and the field would be rather limited.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But it's not a situation where one is zeroed in on at the beginning and others who might be able to do it...

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...or might think they can do would be frozen out in the first instance?
