resulting. If I pay you a hundred dollars for a room, you have to hire somebody to clean the room, you have to hire somebody to maintain the room. If I paid you $20 for a meal, you had to pay a waiter, who had a home and who made other expenditures. It's that kind of a derivative.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But the waiters and those people are going to be there anyway, aren't they? And they don't get more or less based on you having attended the convention.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Presumably, they have additional revenues that they would not have had in their pockets to spend by reason of your attendance.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So the waiters...

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: I...you...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...benefit from this too.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Senator Chambers, I don't know if I would want to wait on your table or not. You're maybe not much of a tipper, I don't know.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh, yes, I am.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Yes, I...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: In fact, everybody tells me I tip too high, too much, but I see how difficult it is to deal with the public and so sometimes I try to make up for what others won't give.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: That...that was...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But I'm a good tipper.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: That was my suspicion.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Let me ask (laugh) you another question, Senator Wickersham. Now when we get to subdivision (d): "Estimates of attributable revenue based on the investment multipliers", everything in this...
