money in the Hardship Fund and at this point with everyone wanting to do many different things and seeing the amount of times we would have to pull a bill back, I think it's best to end on a harmonious note, recognize that we had an opportunity. That opportunity passed and I would ask for your support to bracket the bill. Thank you.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: With unanimous consent...motion is debatable. The Speaker's list is as follows if you want to speak on the motion to bracket: Senator Coordsen, followed by Senator Lynch, Brashear, Brown, Jensen, Janssen, Bohlke, Wehrbein, Beutler, Schrock, Chambers and Bromm. Senator Coordsen.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Thank you, Mr. President, members of the body. The little visit that the philosophical dissertation by the honorable member from the 11th District reminds me of what probably happened many, many, many years ago when he was about a 14-year-old lad and he went to mom and he said, Mama, my friends want to stay out tonight. And Mama said, your curfew time to be home is ten o'clock. And the future senator said, Mama, my friends want to stay out. And Mama said, there's nothing good ever happens after ten o'clock; you be home. Now that's a typical thing that mamas say. And the same thing can be said about the Legislature on the fifty-eighth day. After about seven o'clock in the evening, we tend not to do very good work. Tempers tend to get short, feelings are hurt, vetoes are either known in the case of this year or feared in the case of some years in the past. Down home there's a story about the man years ago had a fine horse. And his neighbor thought he had a fine horse and he kept asking when he wanted to sell the horse; said, horse not for sale. Neighbor said, give you a thousand dollars for that horse. Oh, it was a good horse. Owner of the horse said, not for sale. Every day, neighbor would come over, give you a thousand dollars for that horse. Fine horse, make a pair at home. Finally one day the neighbor showed up and says, want to buy that horse, fine horse; give you a thousand dollars for the horse. The horse's owner said, okay, sold, give me the thousand dollars. So the neighbor handed over the thousand dollars. The new owner of the horse went down to the barn, down to the stable to get the horse. He come running back to the house, he says, you cheated me; the horse is dead. And the
