groundswell on the part of station owners saying it is too difficult to label my pump so I want to avoid having to label it.

SENATOR CUNNINGHAM: Not that I'm aware of.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do you think station owners want to be able to let their customers know if ethanol is what they will be purchasing.

SENATOR CUNNINGHAM: Could I insert one thing here, Senator Chambers? Could I have one second?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Sure. We're having a back-and-forth,...

SENATOR CUNNINGHAM: Okay. I just...I just...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...and you're going to answer the question?

SENATOR CUNNINGHAM: Yeah, but I've forgotten that already, but...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay.

SENATOR CUNNINGHAM: ...I just wanted to tell you that my Mom and Dad are in the audience today and my Mom really doesn't take kindly to people picking on her little boy, so be careful. (laughter)

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And with the respect that I have for mothers, I can only extend my condolences that she would have a son who needs to be picked on in this fashion. (laugh) But if there was any son who needs to be picked on that I would not pick on, it would be Senator Cunningham.

SENATOR CUNNINGHAM: Well, thank you.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And with that, Senator Cunningham, do you think that consumers have a right to know if the gasoline they're purchasing has ethanol in it?
