April 2, 2002 LB 600

SENATOR COORDSEN: I don't know what a soliloquy is, but I suppose a swan song might be somewhat appropriate. Senator Chambers noted something that I do hope that people paid attention to. And what Senator Chambers noted was that the only way this Legislature is able to function is when we look at issues and agree or not agree, and I will second Senator Chambers' comment that we have agreed far more times than what we have disagreed. And we hear many times and generally promote it on some newspaper page about rural-urban split and that sort of thing. All of the good that's been done in the Legislature has not been done by the rural people, whatever that definition is. All of the good in the Legislature has not been done by the urban people, whatever that definition is. The good that's been done by the Legislature over time has come from the statesmanship of the members of the Legislature without taking a parochial view. This bill is so designed to be out of my control. It becomes the property of the Legislature. We have identified a problem, we have identified an ongoing problem. Whether the bill advances to final reading or not this morning, and it would appear from the last vote that unanimity is not its fate, but the issue will not go away. In those issues that were of statewide import in the past, where the Legislature refused to listen to what the voice of their constituency said, ultimately, ultimately that constituency through the power of initiative petition did do what needed to be done. When the Legislature passes on the opportunity to create a cohesive system that is constitutional, that does meet a test of rationality, and pass that up, we have term limits, we have a number of other things that have crept into our constitution by petition. I'm not going to be part of that because I don't believe in making constitutional amendments by petition. I think it's too important a document to do that. But this bill does, in fact, meet all of those tests. It is positioned in such a way that the body of this Legislature would be able in the next legislative session, a full two-year session, to make whatever modifications they might find necessary, but I share with you that there are probably not very many. Senator Landis and I co-opted on the workers' comp reform. I don't believe there's been any modifications of that necessary, and it met with a lot of resistance. Senator Thompson...
