LB 868

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Right, but not all of them are going to actually take advantage of that option.

SENATOR RAIKES: I think he called...

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Very few.

SENATOR JANSSEN: Senator Vrtiska.

SENATOR VRTISKA: Thank you, Mr. President, members of the body. I have to tell you I'm embarrassed, I'm terribly embarrassed. All my life I've used the excuse that I started to school when I was four years old, and I didn't go to kindergarten; I started in the first grade. And I've always used the excuse that I'm so dumb and so "unability" to grasp the English language for the reason that I started to school so young and was not mature enough. And I've come here and I find the most intelligent person in the body, Senator Chambers, who started about the same time, and he's probably the brightest guy in this. So it threw my theory out the window. I can't use that excuse anymore, because it doesn't stand up. Now it doesn't have much to do with the bill we're talking about, except I had to get that off my mind, because it's very obvious that I'm not as smart as a lot of people around here, and I thought I had a good reason. But I found out I didn't have a good reason, based on what I'm hearing from all the people, all the bright people who have gone through here that started to school when they were four. Having got that off my chest, I'll turn the rest of my time back to Senator Schimek.

SENATOR JANSSEN: Senator Schimek.

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Thank you. And thank you, Senator Vrtiska. I think I finished that part of the conversation I was having with Senator Raikes. I just have one other question about this whole policy. And...or maybe it's a comment, rather. I was at a Delta Kappa Gamma meeting last night, which is an education sorority, and there were about 30-35 teachers there. And at my table where we ate dinner, they were telling me about some of the problems they were encountering. And one of the...two of
