certain programs after they are approved by the federal government are eligible for that share of those $25,000. And those are tax dollars...those are federal tax dollars that Nebraskans have paid, and if we don't use that $25,000, our share, then Oklahoma was going to use those Nebraska tax dollars, or Kansas, or Colorado. This isn't a new program. It's been in existence. As far as the introduction and the permanent stoppage of progress by introduction of the nongame and endangered species, Colorado has just adopted a program, and by coincidence there was a special on television Sunday night about this, exactly the same program, the one that this bill is modeled after. Colorado predicts by their efforts alone they can take the river otter off the endangered species list in about nine years. We can speed that process and then we won't have any progress stop by this endangered species. The peregrine falcon is another one that they are going to deal with, that Colorado is dealing with. Nebraska has a very integral part in the federal program to reintroduce this species. Now if we don't take the lead in this the feds are going to come in, and that's all there is to it. Now if you are worried about the money involved in setting this program up, if you'll take the time to read this five-page bill, I don't think that's asking much...if you will take time to look at the fiscal note. They are trying to say $40,000 to set this up. Well, what they are trying to do is get $40,000 for the Department of Revenue because they redesign this form every year. It's going to be redesigned next year. It doesn't cost $40,000 to put a couple of little boxes on that form. It's going to be redesigned any way. As far as the implementation....

PRESIDENT: One minute, Senator Reutzel.

SENATOR REUTZEL:if you will look, if you will look at the fiscal note, they say the actual cost of the administration to be very minimal. That's not my fiscal note. That comes from the state's fiscal note. I don't mind if you vote in favor of Senator Kahle on this motion. I don't mind if we don't advance the bill. If you kill it, that's fine. If you do it on the basis of the bill, on its own merits, but not on the basis of the misinformation that has been spread statewide by a number of individuals, and you know who they are. If you will take the time to read the bill, it's not nearly as complicated as you would be led to believe, and it doesn't create a new commission. It doesn't involve new tax dollars. It's purely voluntary, not mandatory.
