impact so I would have a couple questions of Senator Wesely.

SENATOR WESELY: Yes, Senator DeCamp.

PRESIDENT: Senator Wesely.

SENATOR WESELY: Yes.

PRESIDENT: Senator Wesely, will you respond?

SENATOR WESELY: Yes.

SENATOR DeCAMP: Senator Wesely, as you know...as you know in recent years, because of high taxes, because of high national income taxes particularly, a habit has been developed by public officials of "donating their papers" to this public entity or that public entity and then ascribing a particular value to those and then making huge tax deductions. I believe one of the most classic cases in recent years, of course, was a fellow named...let's see, Richard Milhous Nixon, and another fellow named Lyndon Baines Johnson. Needless to say, all kinds of minor officials have also utilized this technique. Now is that what might possibly be behind this bill? It looks like it sets up a complete system for doing this very thing. So while it may have no direct fiscal impact in terms of hiring somebody or something like that, is it going to have economic impact on the state because somebody is going to claim a big deduction because they donated their "public papers"?

SENATOR WESELY: John, this bill is exactly trying to deal with that problem.

SENATOR DeCAMP: A likely story. Go ahead.

SENATOR WESELY: It just has to be filed with the State Archives. There is no tax deduction possible with this legislation, let me assure you.

PRESIDENT: The Chair recognizes Senator Murphy.

SENATOR MURPHY: Senator Wesely as one who is about to leave these hallowed halls and would like to leave my records and marks all over the place. Unfortunately, I don't have any. But to say there is no fiscal impact when the import is to provide for collecting and storing for eternity an unknown quantity of papers and literature and things that I deem valuable seems to me to fly right squarely in the face of reality. We cannot do these things and not
