

is less than what the cost for private operating cars and there would appear that there could be a cost saving incurred by the use of state cars as opposed to the others, the private owned, where it might be encouraged by a higher level. Granted there are one or two instances where such as brand inspectors that might be a different problem. Also we took recognition of the fact that most of the private companies that had been surveyed appeared to be at the seventeen cents level as of September, at least. It is true that by putting this amendment on 615, the DeCamp amendment, will necessitate an A bill. The other day I thought that might be a problem but we would need an A bill whether it comes out of the committee in 652 or 615 so that is immaterial.
