

any other Senator names any more but it is why I think that book said, not money but the love of money is the root of all evil. The love of money is a leveler. It strips away all of the hypocrisy and all of the sham and what flag, regardless of the flag being flown, it shows what manner of ship and what manner of captain is really there to be dealt with. Now I think of an example of an old guy named Esau who was out in the field. He had a brother who was slick named Jacob. Jacob was the mother's favorite. Old Esau had been out there hunting, probably a farmer, and he was very very hungry. So Jacob, the mama's boy, was to get this older son's birthright and you know how advantage was taken of him? Give him a bowl of soup in exchange for his birthright. So take this individual and say because he was dumb enough to get into a vulnerable position, allow his brother to sell him life in exchange for his birthright and do you know what life for Esau was, a bowl of soup, and the psychologists have told us that if a person perceives the thing as being real, it is real to that person and its consequences. We know that people are uptight and I am shocked that with all the high flown discussion of inflation and financial matters, nobody has mentioned the principle of cheap money and when I say cheap, I mean money that has no value. A dollar is not worth anything. The greenback has now been replaced by the Susan Anthony dollar. So you take people who don't understand that money is merely a commodity and let them get indebted up to their ears for dollars to a certain number and those dollars are not worth anything. Then if there is a turn no matter how slight in the economy and the value of the dollar increases, then you pay for cheap dollars with dear dollars. Although you give the same number of dollars you give back more in purchasing power when you pay it off and there is bland, almost self-righteous discussion on the floor of the Legislature about making all of this money available for the small lender as though a favor is being done for that person. The federal government has pointed out that revolving accounts now account for about $55,000,000,000 of the outstanding amount of $133,000,000,000 in consumer credit and that doesn't mean anything to anybody but the federal government is talking about putting some restrictions on the revolving credit accounts. Pretty soon the Legislature will tag along and all of a sudden get the vision on that and say, yes, something ought to be done about the revolving credit accounts because a lot of things are being discussed here where words are being spoken without a full understanding of their meaning or else people don't care what they mean. Now I remember reading before this session of the Legislature...

SENATOR CLARK: You have about thirty seconds, Senator Chambers.
