

SENATOR HOAGLAND: There are federal laws against it.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Is there a federal law dealing with this that we're dealing with?

SENATOR HOAGLAND: It is not an effective one, Senator Chambers. These people are manufacturing these by the tons, they are being seized up in Omaha.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: No, that is not what I am asking you. Is there a federal law on the subject?

SENATOR HOAGLAND: Well, that is a pretty general question. There is a federal law on about every subject under the sun.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Is there a federal law dealing with what this bill deals with, namely, look-alike drugs?

SENATOR HOAGLAND: There is not a federal law that effectively prohibits look-alike drugs in Nebraska, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I'm not talking about whether it is effective or not. Senator Hoagland reminds me of a guy...

PRESIDENT: One minute, Senator.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: There was a piano keyboard stretched from California to New York and he danced across that keyboard without striking a note. That's classic pussyfooting, so Senator Hoagland is not going to answer the question, but I'm going to ask him again. Is there a federal law dealing with look-alikes?

SENATOR HOAGLAND: There is not...the answer to that is, no, there is not an effective federal law dealing with look-alikes in Nebraska, Senator Chambers, and that is why I'm bringing this bill in.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you. Don't take my time, I have a minute. Members, he said there is no federal law, because they can't deal with it then, apparently, so they are going to tell the states, you go out there and make the kid just like the manufacturer, and as to what Senator Pirsch said, she is not a mind reader and if she is she is illiterate
