

PRESIDENT: He will understand.

SENATOR HIGGINS: Anyway, I think Vice-President George Bush should get a copy of the resolution because he's the guy that has got to run in four years and I think also at the end of it we should add, for the Vice-President's consideration, that across the country, not just in Nebraska, but nationwide the farmers voted nine to one for Reagan. And then I think Vice-President Bush could go talk to Ronald Reagan and then maybe he could get him to reconsider his veto. So I think maybe we ought to bring a little politics into it because you know politics is behind it right now. That would be my suggestion. I'm not making it as a motion. I'm just saying it as a consideration. I think this administration should be reminded that the farmers put that administration in office and four years from now as that Democrat used to say, what goes around comes around. And I think Washington understands those kind of things better than they do anything else. Thank you.

PRESIDENT: Senator Chambers, do you wish to speak again on this matter? We will have order in the Chamber, please. (Gavel.) Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Mr. Chairman and members of the Legislature, there are two things that I hear being discussed this morning, one is a guaranteed loan approach, the other is an interest buy down. From what I gathered in listening, a proposal by Senator Zorinsky contained one hundred million dollars for the buy down. Is that correct? Can somebody just nod yes if that is correct? All right. To show how trifling and piddling that amount is, Iowa, I believe, has a proposal, the little State of Iowa, for an interest buy down and the amount they set aside is $62 million. So if a little pinhead state like Iowa will set aside $62 million, what is one hundred million dollars for the entire federal government to cover the entire country? What was done with that vote by the Senate and the House the other day was to let the politicians in Washington have it both ways. I don't think any of the politicians in Washington, Democrat or Republican, think that much of the farmers, but here's how they have it both ways. They take a nothing bill and vote to pass it knowing that Reagan is going to veto it, so they can say, we put something through and that terrible Mr. Reagan vetoed it. But then Mr. Reagan is not really in too bad a position because he can say, what
