

amendments before it have done and that is to separate the concept of title insurance from the concept of abstracting. And, basically, it does that by striking lines 1 and 2 at the top of page 7, so that the definition of abstracting is limited to those who may certify abstracts or otherwise attest to the accuracy of abstracts. There is no intention to limit in any way what abstracting is. The intention is to do as the other amendments have done which have been approved, is to separate the two concepts of abstracting from title insurance. This is the amendment that was agreed upon, the compromise that was agreed upon which apparently is not quite agreed upon somehow. In any event, we are going to work in the next couple of minutes here to see if it can be agreed upon and I am sure Senator DeCamp will have some comments in the meantime.

PRESIDENT: Senator DeCamp.

SENATOR DECAMP: Mr. President, I am not sure what he is offering. Is he offering the one that he had a little while ago that we passed over? Or is it a different one? The answer to that is...

PRESIDENT: Senator Beutler, Senator DeCamp wants to know just exactly what we are discussing here.

SENATOR DECAMP: In other words, you offered an amendment a little while ago. It was passed over because I felt there wasn't agreement. You felt there was. Is that the same amendment you are offering now?

SENATOR BEUTLER: No, it is not. What happened, Senator DeCamp, as you know, the people who are interested in the bill we have been doing some negotiating for the last hour out there. There were a number of amendments. With regard to this particular amendment, it had two parts, 1 and 2. I had originally filed this as parts 1 and 2. I didn't get back in time to withdraw it. I simply filed a second one which deleted 1. So when this came up the first time, I should have passed over it and simply withdrawn it so we could have taken up the second version of it as agreed upon. But the second version of it which we now have before us has, in fact, been agreed upon.

SENATOR DECAMP: Okay, this is the one we just agreed to out there? This is the version?
