

don't go voluntarily, as they call it, through the 407 process. In a sense going through the 407 process is like placing your head in position to be ministered upon by the guillotine. We all know what the outcome of that will be. If Senator Wesely, who is offering this bill and shepherding it through this Legislature, cannot tell you what is going to be done next year, you are going to vote for the bill anyway, aren't you. You know what? I wish Senator Vard Johnson was here. Maybe the Governor had a point in what he said the other day. I've been doing a little research on that. Animal carnival, or carnival of animals, whatever it is, can be construed to be a complimentary type thing to be made a part of when you look at the others who, in that poetry, are dealt with. But in the negative sense, Senator DeCamp, he may have had a point. If we are going to take a piece of legislation that is radically changing the process by which we legislate and accept it when the offeror of the legislation tells you he doesn't know how it's going to work next year, you are going to accept it? Senator Chronister, you are from a rural area, but you're not a farmer, are you? So you don't understand what I'm going to talk about. Senator DeCamp is not a farmer, but he probably understands. Senator DeCamp, is there a species of animal known to follow the leader wherever the leader goes? Senator DeCamp is nodding yes. Is this a four-footed animal with hooves? Several different kinds, says Senator DeCamp. Does this animal have a coat described as wool? Senator DeCamp said, so the Bible says. Is this creature called a sheep? Senator Hefner is pointing to Lamb. Ah ha, a hint. And the sheep, I've been just told, always follow the goat. So we're learning something about farming here this afternoon, the farm economy. We have a piece of legislation which the introducer does not understand how it will operate. The rest of the senators don't understand either, so they are going to suspend their judgement and follow the leader, follow the leader. We don't even have the music of the Pied Piper to beguile us and deprive us of our senses. We've had it pointed out clearly to us what the situation is here today, but it doesn't make any difference. Why should the Legislature have gotten upset about what the Governor said? When I spoke this morning I caught myself trying to soften, to some extent, Senator Johnson's words by saying the Governor is a good man, he is intelligent, and he shouldn't have said that. Sometimes people who are a little distance from the participants of an activity have a degree of objectivity that the participants don't have. If you are
