

Commonwealth bank. I don't know if you can see it or not. It is in the form of an outhouse which I guess is an editorial comment of sorts, but the way it works is you put a quarter in and it falls apart. I'm not trying to trivialize the situation, but I thought it had great symbolic value because the day that bank closed there were a lot of lives that fell apart in this city. The average age of the Commonwealth depositor is about 57 years old. Most of the accounts in that bank were the life savings of individual citizens and the individual citizens that I am talking about are not welfare patients, are not deadbeats, are not people who have sucked off the state all their life. They're people who have been hard-working people. They're the solid citizenry of this state, the nine to five people who year after year have made this a great state and a great country and, by golly, I think you owe them the benefit of the doubt. I think you owe them the benefit of the doubt. Thank you.
