

would be close to 700,000. But Lincoln would go from 85,000 more to 47,000 less.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I am sure Senator Warner...oh.

SENATOR BARRETT: Senator Higgins.

SENATOR HIGGINS: Are we not...(inaudible)?

SENATOR BARRETT: We are.

SENATOR HIGGINS: Should not every senator be in his seat and not out lobbying?

SENATOR BARRETT: That is correct.

SENATOR HIGGINS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

SENATOR BARRETT: Your point is well taken.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Barrett, did I understand you to say that every senator during Final Reading must be in his or her seat?

SENATOR BARRETT: I believe those are the rules.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: It is going to be difficult but I am trying to do what I am told to do. I am sure Senator Warner explained very clearly what is going on, but I don't think I understood very well. So I am just going to not do anything on this amendment and then if I disagree with it later, I might try to do something to modify it. But since I am not clear on exactly what is going on and what the intent is, I am just going to leave it as it is. Oh, Senator Wesely is saying that he can explain it very, very clearly. So may I ask Senator Wesely to say whatever it was he was desirous of saying.

SENATOR BARRETT: Senator Wesely.

SENATOR WESELY: Thank you, Mr. President. I did leave off a little handout. You might want to take a look at it, Ernie. What is the situation is that in 1983 we had a 5 percent tax rate with a $1 million exemption at the Fairgrounds.
