CLERK: 25 ayes, 0 nays to cease debate, Mr. President.

PRESIDENT: The motion carried. Senator DeCamp, you may close.

SENATOR DECAMP: Yes, Mr. President, I would like to deal very quickly with Moammar and the Martin Luther King holiday here, issue, so it is all clear and why this wasn't done earlier like in the special session. With respect to the issue Senator Chambers has raised, I am not sure it is relevant but it has kind of been made a part of this particular discussion. I believe it is very appropriate for the Legislature to discuss in some depth our attitude and express to the public our attitude on the issue of terrorism. I think a month ago, like most of you, I have a weekly news article, I dealt with that issue for one entire article. The issue of terrorism has seeped into every single home in America. Now whether that terrorism comes from within the boundaries of this country, whether it comes out of the Palestinian refugee camps, whether it comes out of Libya, directly or indirectly, whether it comes out of Israel, wherever terrorism comes from in this day and age when we are all so intertwined it becomes something that we all have to force ourselves to deal with and indeed deal with it as a Legislature we will. Those that need to be condemned I am sure we will condemn and we may even discover that as legislators we have a responsibility to be taking some actual legislative action. I don't know, but I do know it is a subject that is as pertinent today as any time. Now with respect to the holidays and the questions, very legitimate questions, that Senator Hefner raised, the original bill that I have before you did deal with all the holidays just as Senator Hefner is suggesting. I am intending to strip all those provisions out and deal only with the bank holiday issue. I happen to agree completely with Senator Hefner, maybe even more strongly than he feels, that the holidays have become almost ludicrous in this country. If you will travel to other parts of the world,
