

January 16, 1986

My best proof of that argument is my reminiscences of Vietnam. The game we played, the game played in the paper, the absolute god of the Vietnam War was body count. Now it didn't matter, it didn't matter that 15 of those bodies laying there were children, that 18 were women, that 5 were old men, and that maybe 4 even had ever held a gun, when they were laying there they became 50 dead Communists. We made body count everything. I almost see the same thing happening with this magic of bill numbers. We've made numbers of bills the god around which we have to rally all our action. If you've got 10 bills and they've got 5 bills, somehow we have to equalize it. I say deal with the substance rather than the form. That Judiciary Committee, that Public Health Committee where the major changes are being made, they have functioned awfully good in the past and I'm sure they will again. But I'm sure it takes a little internal tampering rather than redoing the whole system from the outside. So I think that until there is a better case made, until there is a better case made maybe we should stick with what we had, what has worked pretty good and force a little internal restructuring.

PRESIDENT: Thank you. Senator Labeledz. The speaking order after Senator Labeledz is Scofield, Schmit, Lundy, Warner, Higgins, Vickers, Beutler and Haberman.

SENATOR LABEDZ: Thank you, Mr. President. I certainly don't want to repeat what I said the other day on this changing of the rules or restructuring. But I must say it again, when I was Chairman of Constitutional Revision and Recreation we had over 30 constitutional amendments. We worked very hard and went through them very, very closely. Now, remember, if they go to the individual subject committee they may get one, or two, or three and advance all three. Think of the time that is going to be spent on this floor if each one of the 13 committees send out at least one or two constitutional amendments because they will be important subject matters to that committee. Our committee constantly would keep in mind, when we went into Exec Session, as to how many constitutional amendments we were putting on the floor. We went through those that we thought could be delayed a couple of years. We took the most important that we thought were important to the people of the State of Nebraska and we would let out three or four. If we send those constitutional revisions to each committee, we may end up with 15, 20, maybe even 25 constitutional