

misrepresentation of a material fact, unless somebody says well he is as big as a dog house. (Laughter.) But I didn't write that. This is how ridiculous these righteous people are when they react to an editorial. Here is what they ignored, the law allows me, orally, to say anything I want to, no matter how false or anything else it is. It doesn't relate to the way a politician is going to do most of his or her communicating, which is by way of speeches. So I can lie, and lie like a cross-tie and the law, even as it existed, would not make that wrong. But if I write something in the privacy of my room it is a crime. There was a gentleman who was once beheaded because he wrote some things in the privacy of his room and it was discovered in England, and he was beheaded. Some of the scholars will know who that person is, but I'm not going into history today. Terry Carpenter said, politics is a dirty, double-crossing game, and that is why he loved it. It's always going to be a dirty, double-crossing game, and it should be because dirty, double-crossing people are politicians. So how can you expect to gain to be different from the people who play it. You can tell when some people are running for office because they switch their positions on issues, and we are going to pretend that doesn't happen. I made some comments about them taking racist George Washington, slave-holder, bastard producing George Washington, war mongering George Washington, fornicating George Washington off the wall. The Lincoln Journal wrote an editorial, so George is going to be back up there. That is what Senator Beutler told them. Abraham Lincoln, the biggest hypocrite in history,...

PRESIDENT: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...is going to be back up there. When I was running for Governor I didn't change a position that I had taken prior to running. When I ran for Attorney General I didn't change a position that I had prior to running. Now we see this microscopic sensitivity to these issues, but Senator Beutler would ordinarily say, yes, it is wrong to make it a crime to simply write something or print it, you have to do something in addition to that before you ought to make it a crime. But he wants that kind of thing back into the law. I think Senator DeCamp's amendment should stay and Senator Beutler's motion should be defeated.

PRESIDENT: The Chair recognizes Senator DeCamp.
