

PRESIDENT: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...and yet they have the...the land was available and they could have done it. When people need help, they will go to the devil himself, and some of you all should be concerned about the fact that rural people are turning to me who, in some people's mind, am worse than the devil himself. There are right-wingers, as they are called, who are going to where the farmers are. I go where the farmers are so you see the unlikely coalition of these so-called antiblack right-wingers and antiwhite Ernie Chambers working together where the farmers are. At least we go and talk to them. The biggest mistake would be to repeal this measure or place it on the ballot for a vote. We have got to take actions as a Legislature that indicates we are grappling with the problem as much as lies within our power, and rather than put this proposition on the ballot, we should look at the bill that Senator Rod Johnson has that would make it possible for a farmer facing foreclosure to rescue his or her farmstead and some of the other measures that will be practical steps towards solving the problem. I didn't get to say all I have got to say. I will never do that but I might take one more shot at it.

PRESIDENT: Thank you, Senator Chambers. The Chair recognizes Senator DeCamp.

SENATOR DECAMP: Mr. President and members, last week when we discussed this, I felt we never ever got into the substance. In listening to the arguments this morning, I believe those who are against reconsideration are not talking substance. Once again it is emotion. Nobody describes how Initiative 300 is going to save this. Nobody discusses any of those things. I would like to delve directly into the substance and I would like to coin a phrase from Senator Harris back there and deal strictly with what Initiative 300 does and what is going to happen to Nebraska. And maybe, maybe you can call me DeCamp, the loudmouth, or DeCamp, the know it all, or whatever else I have been called in the letters and the newspaper letters, but I am telling you, I am right, I am right, I am right. Now let me tell you about a factory you have got that you are going to destroy. It is the single biggest factory in the United States, and it is as much a factory as any factory ever built. It is a red meat factory. Piece number
