

some of the worthwhile programs that come up later in the debate are having to be scrapped because we have already spent the money. This is one particular program I feel very strongly about that I think that we should make an effort to try and help those that need the help, and I believe that this program has done that. In talking with some senators during the course of this debate and the debate on yesterday on this issue, I think those of us in the rural areas that have experienced the program or who have constituents who have utilized the program have said it is a well run program and a program that has helped an awful lot of people and, believe me, we are going to have an awful lot more people out there that are going to need to utilize this program this year, and the years to come if the ag economy stays the way it is, and I anticipate it will if not worsen. So this is one particular program where we can get people back into the mainstream of life and assist them in trying to rebuild or reconstruct their life in a new direction outside of agriculture, and in doing so, I think the money would be well spent.
