SENATOR SCOFIELD: But we can do that, we can get where we need to go, Senator Chambers, but I think we have got to first make a legitimate effort to make a cut. The Appropriations Committee has done the best job I think we can.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you. I am going to say again and I am going to keep saying it because you all wanted to stay here for the whole time so knowing what I am going to say, you wanted to hear me say what I am going to say. We are not going to solve the problem. Grown people have chosen to place themselves in the role of little children with the Governor being the father figure. He said, I insist that you do this. So 38 said, yes, sir, father, we are going to do it. And if somebody asks father the question, will this solve the problem? Then father says, no, I told you when I first called you it is not going to solve the problem. You are not down there to solve the problem, you are down there because I called you and told you to go down there. Now it is not yours to reason why. You just go down there and do what I told you to do. Senator Scofield is right, there are some intelligent people in this Legislature. And the Governor said, as literary persons often ask you to do when they resort to what is called a voluntary suspension of disbelief so that you accept unreal things as being possible so that they can go on with the story, I ask you to suspend your intelligence and go down there and pretend that what you are doing is intelligent. But that which is intelligent is geared to solve a problem that we are confronted with. The mind is like an auger...

SENATOR BEUTLER: Thirty seconds.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...placed against a piece of wood, it will work its way through it but when you don't have the auger you can't accomplish anything and we were not given the tools and we are asked to suspend the operations of our mind. I won't proceed much further because my time is up, but I am going to repeat these things ad infinitum, ad nauseam.

SENATOR BEUTLER: Senator Labeledz.

SENATOR LABEDZ: We are speaking on the amendment for Games
