

much greater hazards to face than those created by cigarette smoking, so I can see where a doctor might give the advice he did, although I'm not going to say that it was an ethical thing for a doctor to do. Now as far as the smuggling, any time, Senator Rupp, there is a chance to make money by any operation, some people are willing to risk that. But it would never compare to the bringing in of cocaine from Columbia because the amount of money is not going to be the same, and they would have to sell the cigarettes for less than what you get them in the store, and I'm sure if you can buy cocaine at any place less than that then what you are getting is not cocaine. If you'll sell it for less than that, you will run Columbia and everybody else out of business if anybody who is listening to me is inclined to do that kind of thing. Now Senator Higgins also knows that no matter how much coffee a person drinks they are not affecting anybody else. If they don't Scope or use Listerine their breath might be offensive if they are too close after that stuff breaks down in your mouth, but it is not fouling the air and creating the possibility of causing cancer to somebody in the same way they've demonstrated that secondhand smoke did. John Marshall, who was an old time old line, I started to say chairman, Chief Judge of the U.S. Supreme Court, said that the power to tax is the power to destroy, and that is absolutely correct. In some instances I'm not opposed to using the tax power for that purpose. So I'm not looking at it just from a revenue producing point. Senator Higgins mentioned that when people get over the hill they don't have sex. Well, they found what they call the "Love Boat" syndrome on these elderly women, one was 59 and one was 60 and they had this hepatitis and it's because they had multiple sex partners, including the crew on these cruises and that is what they go out there hunting for. They are predators. I guess in their old age they decided to do the things that they had the inclination to do but never the nerve. When they got old enough it didn't make any difference anymore, in fact, it even made them seem a bit macho or "machess." Now I'd like to read something for you in closing from Yul Brynner. Actor Yul Brynner left this warning to smokers, "It is suicide," and I know this is going to make no difference to anybody. Brynner died last Thursday of complications from lung cancer. Within hours of his death, radio and television networks began airing interviews made with the actor earlier this year when he said he wanted to leave a strong antismoking message as his legacy. "If I could take back that smoking, we wouldn't be
