

paid, incompetents in the state for what? For many years of service to Nebraska. Now maybe if he had been in the penitentiary, I would thank him for the service to Nebraska, but that would not be service which was voluntary. So since it can't be established that he has contributed anything to Nebraska, I think the Legislature has no place thanking him. You don't thank me and I make less than Segnar and I would venture to say I do more, not necessarily that you like it more. But we don't have any obligation to be thanking these people, especially when they have been so ineffective in what they were doing that they are bounced by those who know them best. If you look at the morning paper at a cartoon strip called The Neighborhood, you will see a lady coming down from a ladder with an axe in her hand. There is a big remnant of a monument over a grave and all that is left is some rubble on top of the big block where feet once were and a statue has been toppled and is lying on his head on the ground. And the caption says, Whoever The Lady Is Knew Her Husband Better Than Anybody Else. So knowing him in the way that she knew him, despite the monument that others who didn't know him had erected, she got herself a ladder and went up there and chopped down the monument to that scoundrel and that is what he must have been in her opinion. So I am asking or suggesting that the Legislature strike this second resolve for the reasons that I have given and others that I am trying to be discreet about that I won't give.

SENATOR CARSTEN: Senator Wesely.

SENATOR WESELY: Mr. President and members, I know Senator Chambers feels strongly about this and I, too, had to gulp when I was first drafting this about including a thanks to Sam Segnar because I had heard that he had not wanted to stay in Omaha, but Nebraskans are people that are separated from many others because we are the kind of people that care about others and understand the fact that even if you disagree with somebody, it doesn't mean you have to be disagreeable and I think we have always shown a desire to be cooperative with people. You know, the good book, the Bible talks about turning the other cheek and I think even if he was perhaps not supportive of staying in Omaha, we ought to turn our cheek at this point and at least recognize he has been a member of that corporate community for a long time and the quote in the paper this morning from Frank McMullen of the Omaha Chamber of Commerce said Sam Segnar has been
