

says. I bet he doesn't really know what this one says. He hasn't dealt specifically with a single thing in this bill. But since he's carrying water for the NRA, he feels it's not necessary to know, and they don't feel it's necessary to know. They could have just got a child, if we'd let him come in on the floor, and say, now when you stand up and they recognize you, you say, I want this bill to be indefinitely postponed, all you got to do is get those words before us. I saw a commercial, Senator Hefner, from Virginia, and it was funny, too. They showed this slightly overweight trooper sitting with his door open, his leg sticking out of the car saying, we have a instant check in Virginia; if you want to get a gun, by god, we'll check you instantly, and if a criminal tries to get a gun, we get him. And yet here they're saying criminals are not trying to get the guns by registering them. Doesn't make sense. Then Charleton Heston stopped playing Moses long enough to say the same kind of nonsensical thing. Then you see them in other situations talking about the blood in the streets, the killing, the carnage and so forth. What Senator Hefner doesn't know, but which the NRAites know but conceal, is that a lot of people who become criminals and make an unlawful use of the gun get those guns from so-called law-abiding people. They go into the homes of people who get these guns legally and take them. Many people who try to defend themselves with these guns in their homes wind up not only with the gun being taken, but the gun being used against them. Had they not had a gun, they would still be alive. These kind of things are not discussed. There is a financial angle that the NRA has in all of his, and that is what is motivating them. They've been able to beguile people, like Senator Hefner, and get them off on a false trail, and as a result much of what they say is irrelevant and has nothing to do with the real issues that are involved. There is something else I'd like to call to Senator Hefner's attention, and Senator Schellpeper, and my good colleague, Senator Robak, you can't show me one example of a criminal's child getting the criminal's gun and killing himself or a playmate. The children who kill themselves with guns, and kill their playmates, and kill their parents are the children of so-called law-abiding people who have these guns with no criminal intent. Criminals are too careful with their guns. They don't lay them around where babies can get them, Senator Hefner. All of the examples I've read of in Nebraska, and I've clipped them, of children getting these guns and using them, or having them used on them by other children, are the children of your law-abiding people. But that doesn't bother you. Senator Pirsch quoted the NRA's ridiculous
