thing, that we, in this body, have safeguarded very carefully the individual's right. We don't even...

SPEAKER BAACK: One minute.

SENATOR BERNARD-STEVENS: ...put a past criminal background check where we have an AIDS instructor that might be around students, even though it is a very terrifying disease. And rightfully so, the body has made rightful decisions in protecting the individual's liberties, and once you take that first little step, in this case, it is just teachers, and Senator Horgan even made the comment maybe all professionals later on. Maybe we could do this for everyone, and we could stop one somewhere. Once you take that little step to take rights away, to make people prove their innocence because of a well-intentioned need, where that ends up frightens me. It frightens me. I understand the body probably is of the will to do this.

SPEAKER BAACK: Time.

SENATOR BERNARD-STEVENS: But it scares me, and I hope the body does not and rejects the advancement of the bill. Thank you.

SPEAKER BAACK: Thank you, Senator Bernard-Stevens. Senator Kristensen.

SENATOR KRISTENSEN: Thank you, Mr. President and members of the body. The bill as it originally was written scared me a little because I had the exact feelings that Senator Bernard-Stevens just indicated, and then it became a very practical problem is the fingerprinting and the fingerprinting seemed to not have all the answers, and then my comment to the schools that wanted to do that was, you know, the fingerprinting is a real problem, because you are never going to get the fingerprinting done correctly. You are going to have them go back and forth, and back and forth, and it's going to take a lot of time. You are going to get misprints and there is going to be a general frustration and the system would break down. When the Chizek amendment was adopted, I became a lot more comfortable with this, and for me the bottom line is, basically, you are responsible for your actions, and this isn't an authorization to go and go on a witch hunt and look for all the bad things that may be out there, but it is a check or a look for what your responsibilities and what your record is. And if you've
