

INSIDE OUR NATION'S ONLY UNICAMERAL

THE NEBRASKA LEGISLATURE

ORIGIN OF THE UNICAMERAL

Nebraska's Legislature is unique among state legislatures in the country because it consists of a single body of lawmakers—a one-house legislature, or unicameral. This was not always the case.

Nebraska had a senate and a house of representatives for the first 68 years of the state's existence. It took decades of work to convince Nebraskans to do away with the two-house system (see Norton excerpt, right).

The potential cost-saving aspects of a unicameral system helped the idea gain popularity during the Great Depression. A petition campaign led by the prestigious U.S. Sen. George W. Norris benefited from two other popular proposals that also were on the ballot that year: a local option on prohibition and legalized pari-mutuel betting. In 1934, Nebraska voters finally decided to reform the state legislature on a 286,086 to 193,152 vote.

Norris was a "New Deal Republican" from McCook. Picking up where Norton and others left off, he decried the two-house system as outdated, inefficient and unnecessary. He spread his message through radio broadcasts, printed editorials and personal appearances. Norris was fond of saying that he wore out two sets of automobile tires traveling the state to promote his idea.

The bicameral system in America is modeled after the British Parliament, which consists of the House of Commons—with representatives elected by the people—and the House of Lords, whose aristocratic members are appointed by the crown. Norris argued that this is inherently opposed to the democratic ideal of equality.

A common question raised during consideration of the unicameral was how to preserve the scrutiny that occurs between houses of a bicameral and helps prevent abuses of power. Norris argued that legislation would be held in check by the state Supreme Court and the governor's veto power. More importantly, he said, the people's right to vote and petition would counteract the possible abuse of power by their elected officials. The Nebraska Unicameral would have straightforward procedures and extend greater privileges to the press to allow for enhanced public scrutiny.

"There is no sense or reason in having the same thing done twice, especially if it is to be done by two bodies of men elected in the same way and having the same jurisdiction."

~U.S. Sen. George Norris

“Every act of the legislature and every act of each individual must be transacted in the spotlight of publicity,” Norris said.

In a one-house legislature, Norris said, no actions could be concealed as too often happened in conference committees. A conference committee reconciles differences in legislation when the two chambers of a bicameral legislature pass different versions of a bill. In Nebraska, the appointed six-member committee met in secret, and members’ votes were not public record. Norris said these committees had too much power and easily could be influenced by lobbyists.

Once a bill came out of the conference committee, it could not be changed, only approved or rejected. Today, under our unicameral system, lawmakers propose amendments and debate them openly on the chamber floor.

The argument in favor of conference committees was that they prevented hasty legislation, but the unicameral system has safeguards against this possibility. Nearly all bills must have public hearings, at least five days must elapse between a bill’s introduction and its passage and bills may contain only one subject.

Another unique aspect of Nebraska’s legislature is that it is officially nonpartisan. Norris worked to eliminate partisanship in the Legislature because he believed lawmakers should act on their own convictions and the needs of their districts, rather than according to party dictates. National party concerns, he argued, often have little to do with local government.

Nebraska’s transition from bicameralism to unicameralism in 1937 brought immediate change. Legislative membership went from 133 to 43—nearly a 70 percent reduction. The number of committees decreased from 61 to 18, and 581 bills were introduced in 1937, half as many as in the previous session. The legislature met for 98 days (down from 110), passed 214 bills (up from 192) and cost $103,445 (down from $202,593). As promised, efficiency improved significantly.

Movements for unicameralism have occurred throughout the United States since the nation’s independence, but so far only Nebraska’s has been successful.

The Unicameral’s first clerk, Hugo Srb, predicted that lawmakers in other states would be unlikely to legislate their own jobs out of existence. More than three-quarters of a century later, he has not been proven wrong.

The first Unicameral convened on Jan. 5, 1937.

John N. Norton

Laying the foundation for Unicameralism

Efforts to adopt unicameralism in Nebraska began in 1913, when state Rep. John N. Norton of Osceola helped form a legislative committee to study ways to improve state government. Part of the committee’s plan, first presented to the Legislature in 1915, recommended a one-house system. It was not enacted.

Numerous attempts by Norton and others to switch to a unicameral legislature met with varying degrees of success in following years. While U.S. Sen. George Norris typically is seen as the driving force behind unicameralism in Nebraska, Norton’s work to shape the state’s legislature merits recognition.

Norton served as the District 24 representative in the first unicameral legislature in 1937, helping to implement this new form of government.

ABOUT THE SENATORS

There are 49 senators in the Nebraska Unicameral, each representing approximately 40,000 people. Senators are elected to a maximum of two consecutive four-year terms and receive an annual salary of $12,000. Sessions begin in January and consist of 90 working days in odd-numbered years and 60 working days in even-numbered years. Long sessions usually last until early June, and short sessions last until mid-April. Special sessions may be held at the call of the governor or two-thirds of the Legislature.

A typical session day for a senator could include a meeting over breakfast, a working lunch, visits with constituents, committee hearings, research and floor debate. Senators also have obligations during the interim, including communicating with constituents, working on interim studies with committees and developing bills that they plan to sponsor in the upcoming session.

New and returning senators are sworn into office.

OBSERVING THE LEGISLATURE

The Unicameral meets in the Norris Chamber on the second floor of the State Capitol. During the first half of a legislative session, senators convene there for debate in the mornings and disperse to committee hearings throughout the Capitol in the afternoons. During the second half of session, debate is scheduled for the entire day, with a break for lunch. The agenda is set daily by the Speaker of the Legislature. The legislative calendar, including the daily agenda, is available at NebraskaLegislature.gov.

The Clerk of the Legislature and his staff are at the podium at the front of the chamber. Behind them sits the presiding officer, who recognizes senators in the order of their requests to speak. The lieutenant governor is the president of the Legislature by virtue of his or her office, but the role of presiding officer often is filled by senators in the lieutenant governor's absence.

While bills are being debated, senators often confer with each other on the floor to discuss the measure at hand or items scheduled later on the agenda. They also may consult with their staff or be interviewed by members of the media. Lobbyists are not allowed in the legislative chamber, but they may request that a senator step out of the chamber to meet with them in the rotunda. Because the unicameral is a nonpartisan body, senators are not arranged by political party in the chamber. Generally, newer senators are assigned seats toward the front of the chamber.

Visitors to the Legislature are invited to observe the proceedings from the balconies above the chamber and may be announced by the presiding officer at the request of a senator's office.

CONTACTING YOUR SENATOR

Identifying your senator: Use the “Find your Senator” tool on NebraskaLegislature.gov or contact your county clerk or county election commissioner to determine which district you reside in and which senator represents you.

Personal meetings: The best way to set up a meeting with a senator is to contact his or her legislative office and work with the staff member who handles the senator’s schedule.

Phone calls: Phone calls are effective because they allow for direct contact between constituents and legislators and often are easier to schedule than personal meetings. If a senator is unavailable, his or her staff will see to it that the senator receives your comments.

Email: Senators’ email addresses can be found at NebraskaLegislature.gov. Because of the large volume of email a senator’s office receives, do not expect a response to every message you send. When sending your senator an email, include your name and contact information at the bottom of the message to allow the legislator a variety of ways to respond to you.

Letters: Written letters are effective because they allow constituents to thoroughly explain their needs and positions. Focus on the main points you wish to make. A constructive approach to the issue is more likely to receive attention.

OUR LEGISLATIVE PROCESS

The idea for a new law may come from anyone: concerned citizens, special interest groups, state agencies, the governor or senators themselves. The idea must be introduced as a bill by a senator or a committee to be considered by the Legislature. A bill that advances through all of the stages described here becomes law in Nebraska.

1 RESEARCH, DRAFTING AND INTRODUCTION

Research

First, a senator and his or her staff research a problem and study possible legislative remedies. A senator may introduce a bill to create a new law or to repeal or change an existing law. Staff are available to help legislators with their research. Much of this work takes place during the period between sessions, which is called the interim. During this time, legislative committees study a variety of issues that have been outlined in interim study resolutions passed by the Legislature.

Drafting

A senator brings his or her idea for a new law to a bill drafter, who works with the senator to transform the idea into the proper legal form. Unlike some states, Nebraska requires that each introduced bill contain only one subject.

Introduction

Bills are introduced during the first 10 days of the legislative session. A senator introduces a bill by filing it with the Clerk of the Legislature. The clerk reads the title of the bill into the record, assigns it a number and prints copies of it for public and legislative use.

Fiscal Note

The Legislative Fiscal Office prepares budget statements called fiscal notes, which estimate the change in state, county or municipal expenses or revenue that would result under the provisions of each bill. Each fiscal note contains three estimates: one calculated by the Fiscal Office staff, another prepared by the governor's budget office and a third prepared by the affected state agency. Additionally, the Fiscal Office prepares appropriation bills ("A" bills), which accompany bills that require an appropriation, authorizing the expenditure.

2 COMMITTEES

Every bill receives a public hearing by a legislative committee. A nine-member Reference Committee determines which bills will be heard by each of the 14 standing committees. At hearings, citizens have a chance to express their opinions to the committee members. Testimony is recorded, transcribed and made part of the official committee record. After the hearing, committees may vote to send a bill to general file with or without amendments, indefinitely postpone the bill or take no action.

GENERAL FILE

General file is the first time the full Legislature has the opportunity to debate and vote on a bill. At this stage, senators consider amendments, which may be proposed by committees or individual senators. It takes a majority vote of the Legislature—25 votes—to adopt an amendment or move a bill to the next stage of consideration.

SELECT FILE

Select file is the second debate and voting stage. It provides another opportunity for amendment, compromise and reflection. Bills on select file may be amended, returned to committee, indefinitely postponed or advanced to the next stage.

GOVERNOR

After the Legislature passes a bill on final reading, it goes to the governor for consideration. The governor has five days, excluding Sundays, to act on a bill. If the governor signs a bill or does nothing with it, the bill becomes a state law. If the bill is vetoed, the Legislature may override that veto with a vote of 30 senators.

Most bills passed and approved by the governor go into effect three calendar months after the Legislature adjourns. However, bills may take effect before then if they contain an emergency clause or another specified operative date.

FINAL READING

Before final passage, bills are constitutionally required to be read aloud in their entirety by the Clerk of the Legislature unless three-fifths, or 30 members, of the Legislature votes to waive the requirement.

A bill may not be amended or debated on final reading, but senators may vote to return it to select file for consideration of a specific amendment.

Bills may not be voted on for final passage until at least five legislative days after the bill is introduced and one legislative day after it is placed on final reading.

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEES

Every bill introduced in the Legislature receives a public hearing by one of 14 standing committees, except for a few technical bills. The Reference Committee directs bills to the following committees based on each committee's focused jurisdiction:

- Agriculture
- Appropriations
- Banking, Commerce and Insurance
- Business and Labor
- Education
- General Affairs
- Government, Military and Veterans Affairs
- Health and Human Services
- Judiciary
- Natural Resources
- Nebraska Retirement Systems
- Revenue
- Transportation and Telecommunications
- Urban Affairs

Public hearings on bills typically are held in the afternoons during the first half of the legislative session. Committees have regularly scheduled rooms and meeting days, although they sometimes meet in different rooms at varying times in order to accommodate testifiers or large audiences. The weekly schedule of committee hearings is published on the last legislative day of the week throughout the legislative session and is available from the Clerk of the Legislature's Office, the Sunday editions of the Lincoln Journal Star and the Omaha World-Herald, the weekly Unicameral Update (update.legislature.ne.gov) and NebraskaLegislature.gov.

- If you plan to provide written information to the committee when you testify, please bring enough copies for each committee member, plus three more for support staff. You might call ahead to see if the committee prefers electronic submissions.
 - Fill out the testifier sheet provided in the hearing room prior to testifying. Once you are seated at the testifier's table, identify yourself, spell your name and state what organization you represent, if any. Speak directly into the microphone, as committee proceedings are transcribed.
 - Be prepared to limit your testimony to three to five minutes. If you also are providing written testimony, consider summarizing rather than reading it verbatim.
 - Committee members may ask questions after your testimony. However, testifiers are not allowed to ask questions of committee members.
- If you are not testifying in person but would like to provide input on pending legislation, please visit NebraskaLegislature.gov/committees/public-input.php to learn about your online options.

TOWER ON THE PRAIRIE

Designed by architect Bertram Goodhue and completed in 1932, the Nebraska State Capitol is the third home for the Nebraska Legislature built in Lincoln. Goodhue's design (see original drawing, left) was named the winner of the Capitol design competition in 1920 by the State Capitol Commission over nine other submissions.

The new Capitol was built on the same site as the previous two. State employees worked in the old building while their new offices were built around them. When the north and south portions of the perimeter structure were complete, they moved into those new sections while the old Capitol was razed and the rest of the perimeter and the 400-foot limestone tower were built.

The Sower, created in bronze by sculptor Lee Lawrie, is 19 feet tall and weighs 8.5 tons. It was lifted into place atop the Capitol dome by crane. Lawrie also designed all of the Capitol's exterior and interior carvings and oversaw the artisans who executed his designs.

Of the many artists who contributed to the Capitol, most notable is Hildreth Meière, an artist selected by Goodhue. Meière's designs are found throughout the building and include the striking floor mosaics in the Rotunda.

THE WARNER AND NORRIS CHAMBERS

Because the Nebraska Legislature still was a bicameral legislature when its current Capitol was designed and constructed, the building has two separate legislative chambers.

Located on the east side of the rotunda, the Warner Chamber (left) housed Nebraska's Senate until 1937. Today, it is used for presentations and ceremonial occasions. Its visual elements honor Native American culture.

The Unicameral meets in the Norris Chamber (right), which features a beamed ceiling of Nebraska walnut that provides an ornate history lesson displayed in gold leaf appliqué. The images depict the progress of Western culture in Nebraska, from Spanish explorers to pioneering cattlemen and homesteaders.

Although the chamber was restored in 2008, few changes have been made to the room. Originally, it had seats for 100 lawmakers, but many of these were removed following the adoption of the unicameral system. The legislative floor now seats 49 senators and two sergeants at arms, with a few extra seats available for persons attending special occasions. The senators' desks are crafted of North American walnut.

The large display panels that flank the voting board were installed in 1985 when the voting system was computerized and were updated in 2021. Designed to blend with the limestone wall at the front of the chamber, the panels tell senators which bill is being considered, who sponsors it and the specific item under consideration.

STUDENT PROGRAMS

Unicameral Youth Legislature

The Unicameral Youth Legislature is a multi-day legislative simulation in which students assume the role of lawmakers. Student senators discover the unique process of our nation's only unicameral by sponsoring bills, conducting committee hearings and debating legislation.

Students learn the details of the Unicameral directly from senators, staff and lobbyists using bill topics based on actual legislation considered during the most recent legislative session. Students conduct their legislative duties in the George W. Norris Legislative Chamber, home to the Nebraska Legislature.

The Unicameral Youth Legislature takes place every June and is open to all high school students. To learn more about the camp and available scholarships, visit NebraskaLegislature.gov/uyl or contact 402-471-2788 or uio@leg.ne.gov.

Meet Your Senator

Invite your state senator to your classroom! America's Legislators Back to School Program, sponsored by the National Conference of State Legislatures, connects senators with students in their districts. The program provides an opportunity for senators to teach students about the responsibilities of a senator, the legislative process and how lawmakers work together to solve problems. We invite you to contact your senator's office throughout the year to arrange a visit.

Likewise, if you are planning a field trip to the Capitol, contact your senator's office to ask if he or she is available to visit with your students while they are here. Tours of the State Capitol can be scheduled through the Tours Office at 402-471-0448.

Please visit NebraskaLegislature.gov/students for more information.
